and Rome relied heavily on slave labor, which was integral to their economic and social structures. This period of history is marked by immense suffering and the systematic dehumanization of entire populations.

Historical Context and Causes

Slavery was institutionalized in many societies due to economic, social, and political factors. This system dehumanized millions, reducing people to mere property for profit.

Understanding the roots of slavery involves examining both global economic systems and local power structures that permitted and perpetuated the practice.
