Historical and Theological Context

Josh McDowell's "More Than a Carpenter," first published in the early 1970s, was created during a time when evangelical Christianity sought to address growing skepticism and secular criticisms. By combining historical evidence with personal narrative, McDowell's work aimed to present Christianity as a rational alternative to doubt. The book's methodical approach to Jesus's identity—the 'carpenter' being more than his profession—challenged readers to reconsider preconceived notions about faith.

The Digital Shift and Download Accessibility
