The Origins of Lake Louise and Early Tourism

Lake Louise was originally known as "Ho-run-num-nay" or "Lake of the Little Fishes" by the local Stoney Nakoda First Nations people. The name "Lake Louise" was bestowed in honor of Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, the fourth daughter of Queen Victoria. The area's natural beauty began attracting visitors in the late 19th century, especially after the Canadian Pacific Railway (CPR) completed its transcontinental line through the Rockies.

The CPR played a pivotal role in developing tourism infrastructure in the region. Recognizing Lake Louiseâ€™s potential as a premier destination, the company constructed a series of grand hotels designed to accommodate affluent travelers seeking adventure and comfort amidst wilderness.

The Birth of the Chateau Lake Louise

In 1890, the original hotel at Lake Louise was a rustic log cabin built to serve railway travelers and mountaineers. However, as tourism flourished, the Canadian Pacific Railway commissioned architect Edward Maxwell to design a more impressive structure. By 1911, the Chateau Lake Louise was completed, exemplifying the ChÃ¢teauesque architectural style inspired by French Renaissance castles. Throughout the 20th century, the Lake Louise Hotel underwent multiple expansions and renovations. In the 1920s and 1930s, wings were added to accommodate increasing numbers of guests. Despite challenges like the Great Depression and World War II, the hotel remained a beloved destination.

introducing winter sports facilities, becoming a hub for skiing enthusiasts. The establishment also played a role in promoting conservation efforts as awareness of preserving the pristine environment grew.
