The Philosophical Underpinnings

At the heart of Gaiman's message lies an emphasis on authenticity and perseverance. "Make good art" is a prescription against cynicism and complacency in artistic work. It suggests that regardless of external validation, financial success, or critical acclaim, the primary responsibility of the creator is to their craft – to produce work of substance and honesty.

Cause and Effect in the Creative Process

Gaiman's exhortation can be viewed as both motivational and practical. By focusing on creating "good art," artists are encouraged to cultivate discipline and a long-term perspective.
