GE Appliances: A Legacy of Innovation

General Electric was founded in the late 19th century and grew to become a giant in multiple industries including lighting, aviation, and home appliances. The GE Appliances division has long been associated with quality, innovation, and reliability in kitchen and laundry appliances. While GE-branded washers and dryers carry the company's iconic name, their manufacturing and ownership have evolved over time.

The Whirlpool Corporation Ownership

In 2016, GE Appliances was acquired by the Whirlpool Corporation, one of the largest appliance manufacturers worldwide. However, GE Appliances operates as a distinct subsidiary under Whirlpool, maintaining its own brand identity and product lines.

Manufacturing and Quality Control

GE washers and dryers are designed with input from GE Appliances' engineering teams but are manufactured in facilities operated by Whirlpool or its partners. Whirlpool's extensive manufacturing infrastructure allows GE Appliances to benefit from advanced production techniques, rigorous quality control, and supply chain efficiencies. Despite the change in ownership, GE maintains its commitment to producing reliable, user-friendly laundry appliances suited to a broad range of consumer needs.
