Historical Context and Decision-Making Process

Walker situates the bombings within the broader context of World War IIâ€™s Pacific Theater. The United States faced the prospect of a costly invasion of Japan, with estimates of American casualties reaching into the hundreds of thousands. The development of the atomic bomb under the Manhattan Project introduced a new, unprecedentedly destructive weapon into the military arsenal.

Central to Walkerâ€™s analysis is the decision-making process within the U.S. government. Through extensive examination of classified documents, personal diaries, and official communications, Walker reveals the multifaceted considerations that shaped President Trumanâ€™s ultimate approval of using atomic bombs.
