The Stairwell as a Site of Artistic Intervention

Stairwells are inherently transitional, liminal spaces – neither fully private nor wholly public, often overlooked in spatial design. The consequence of this integration is multifaceted. On one hand, it enriches individual experiences, fostering a deeper appreciation for photographic art. On the other, it raises questions about the preservation of artistic intent and the transformation of art’s meaning outside curated contexts.

Implications for Artists and Viewers

For artists like Seliger, the proliferation of their work in diverse environments can expand audience reach but also complicate control over presentation and interpretation. For viewers, encountering such art in stairwells may provoke moments of reflection or disruption, encouraging a reexamination of both space and image.
