Nestled in South Orange, New Jersey, Seton Hall has carved out a niche in the annals of March Madness with compelling runs, unforgettable games, and a basketball culture that continues to inspire.

Early Beginnings and First Appearances

Seton Hall's journey in the NCAA Tournament dates back several decades, with their first appearance in the 1953 tournament. The Pirates, as they are affectionately known, took their initial steps on the national stage with enthusiasm, though early runs were modest by tournament standards. These formative years laid the groundwork for a program hungry to prove its worth against more established basketball schools.
