Contextualizing the Black Revolution

Emerging in the mid-20th century, the Black Revolution was a response to centuries of systemic oppression, disenfranchisement, and racial violence against African Americans. The post-World War II era revealed glaring contradictions in a nation that proclaimed freedom yet practiced segregation and inequality. This period saw a growing impatience with incremental reforms, fueling more assertive demands for structural transformation.

Malcolm X's Ideological Framework

Malcolm X's ideology was deeply influenced by his experiences with racism, his affiliation with the Nation of Islam, and his later pilgrimage to Mecca, which broadened his perspective on race and solidarity. Early on, he advocated for Black nationalism, self-reliance, and self-defense, distinguishing himself from contemporaries who favored integration and nonviolence. His rhetoric was unapologetically militant, emphasizing that African Americans must assert their rights 'by any means necessary.'

One of the simplest and most effective methods of organization is using clearly labeled folders.
